Phil Myrick, AICP, is Director of Planning for MIG, a planning and design firm founded on research in human environments and environmental psychology. Prior to that, Phil worked for 18 years at the pioneering Project for Public Spaces. Phil has worked around the world leading teams to help clients achieve their goals to create a more connected and vibrant community, whether that means enhancing their livability, redesigning streets, economic revitalization, social integration, or creating strategies to attract talent. Phil applies decades of research into how humans interact with their environments and each other to planning, designing, and placemaking projects in settings as diverse as downtowns, waterfronts, Main Streets, and mixed-use developments.
