

Tracy S. Carusi, AIA, is President/CEO at Collins Cooper Carusi Architects in Atlanta and a LEED-certified professional. She has been an integral part of CCCA's growth since 1990. An industry leader in architectural practice, she believes that inspired design makes a significant difference in how people live well, learn and collaborate. In her over 30 years as an architect, she's led her teams in various award-winning community-based projects, including college and university, public and private K-12, religious, cultural and recreational/wellness. Some of her notable projects include the Emory University Candler

School of Theology Center for Ethics and Pitts Library, Emory University Convocation Hall, the LEED Platinum headquarters for Global Ministries of the United Methodist Church and North Atlanta High School. She attended the University of Tennessee, graduating Magna Cum Laude and has served on various educational, non-profit and editorial boards.

Ms. Carusi is married to Edward Munster and together they have four adult children.
