

Alexandra Kirk is a Development Manager at Jamestown based in the Atlanta office. She currently manages development, overseeing each project's vision, providing financial analysis, securing entitlements and hiring and managing design teams. Previously, Alexandra worked in Skanska USA Commercial Development's Boston Office. As a member of the development team, she worked on several of the company's multifamily projects including managing the $150M sale of the Harlo, a 212-unit boutique apartment building in the Fenway neighborhood. She also managed the acquisition of a 6-acre mixed use site in the heart of Boston. She began her career in Washington DC working for Gensler as a project designer.

Outside of work, Alexandra likes to give back to her community as much as possible. She is currently apart of The Atlanta Women's Foundation's Inspire Program, Class of 2021. She is currently fundraising to support grantee partners across the area who provide services and support to women and children in need. She also is a member of the Wisconsin School of Business's Alumni Board. Prior to the pandemic, she was active with Big Brothers/Big Sisters and Room to Grow, a non-profit focused on providing a strong foundation for babies in low-income families.

Alexandra earned a Bachelor of Architecture from Syracuse University's School of Architecture and an MBA, specializing in Real Estate from the University of Wisconsin-Madison School of Business.