

Darilynn Cardona-Beiler is the Director of Adult Behavioral Health Systems for Integral Care. With over 20 years of experience in health care, social services and community mental health, she has served in various leadership capacities throughout her career. Her service has centered on the indigent, homeless, and underserved populations. Darilynn has applied her focus to individuals living with serious mental illness, co-occurring substance use disorders, and chronic medical conditions through evidence-based and innovative care. She has developed and implemented many homeless service programs and housing developments including Terrace at Oak Springs, the first single site Housing First apartment community in Central Texas serving individuals experiencing chronic homelessness. Darilynn worked as an expert in the development of the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration Permanent Supportive Housing Tool Kit. She is currently working to expand housing as a health care intervention, end homelessness, and to increase access to mental health care to serve all those in need.
